ANNEX C FOREIGN SUPPORT TO THE INSURGENTS

Cuba, Nicaragua, and some of the Soviet Bloc countries have provided Guatemalan insurgents with training, money, and perhaps some arms. Over the past few years, however, the success of the Guatemalan Government's counterinsurgency campaign and the failure of the various guerrilla groups to unify appears to have caused foreign support to the rebels to diminish. During 1985 Havana and Managua continued to supply communications support and training assistance, while Moscow reportedly gave financial aid to the PCT/O. We have no evidence to confirm that any significant arms transfers were completed during the year.

the bulk of the training given to the Guatemilan extreme left occurs in Cuba, although a limted amount is provided by the Sandinistas. Managua probably plays a greater role in facilitating the travel of training candidates to Havana. For example, in September 1984.

Received one month of guerrilla-training in Nicaragua and 18 months in Cuba. The insurgent also reported that two 40-man platoons received similar training in Nicaragua in preparation for their infiltration into San Marcos Department, Gualemala, from Mexico.

1985 that most FAR communities and troops were trained in Cuba and Nicaragua and that most ORPA commanders and half of their troops also were trained there. Last July several new guerrilla instructors were infilitrated from Nicaragua into Gualemala using falsified Nicaraguan passports. The new instructors reportedly were Colombian, Nicaraguan, and Chilean, and all traveled as Nicaraguan refugees

Solid evidence of foreign arms apport in recent years is sporadic

Bulgarla was planning to send an arms shipment to the PGT/O. The source says that Managua agreed to allow the shipment to pass through Nicaragua and that the Communist 'arty of El Salvador would help transfer the arms to:he Guatemalans. Thus far, we have no indiration bal the guerrillas have received the Bulgarian shipmer.

Cuatemalan insurgnts receive arms and other supplies through Mealet and sometimes Belize. In addition, we believe hat land routes through Honduras for weapons from Nicaragua destined for the Salvadorans probablyate abouted to transport materiel to the Guatemalan.
